Dear Dr. Henney:

We, and many of our thinking friends, have been following the unwillingness of your organization to require labeling of rBGH milk when the public has every right to know what kind of milk they are drinking. The lack of sufficient testing has been appalling and it has all the appearances that the FDA is owned and operated by Monsanto. This is apparent because there is evidence that it can contribute to diabetes in children and we expect the FDA to be honest with the public and fulfill its mandate to protect us from all such possible outcomes.

Now Monsanto, and other companies, are selling genetically engineered corn and soybean seeds. Here again, there is little or no testing of the long term effects on cattle and people consuming these foods.

We, the public, are sick and tired of being the guinea pigs for the greedy chemical corporations whose only allegiance is to their "bottom line".

All of these new products need many years of intensive, honest, testing by reliable independent laboratories and then reviewed by an honest FDA before any of this is released for general consumption. In the meanwhile we call upon you to immediately require the labeling of all genetically modified foodstuffs so those of us who have suffered through FDA's mistakes in the past can avoid further health risks in the future.

Sincerely,

Mr. & Mrs. Arthur Kulosa, Jr.
